

The UK's aerospace and defence industry is the second largest in the world, beaten only by the US. It's a sector worth around £25 billion that supports 230,000 jobs across the country, while contributing significantly to the national economy.

The pressure on manufacturers to operate at peak efficiency, however, is intensifying. Companies are being forced to overcome challenges new and old as they look to continue growing in a tough economic climate.

Constant evolution

Companies must be ready to adapt to new technologies and techniques if they're to keep pace with the rest of the industry.

Skills development

With the sector constantly evolving, companies must ensure their workforces are kept up to speed on the latest equipment, processes and regulations; skills development is crucial.

Global competition

As demand grows, so too does competition in the global industry. Manufacturers must set themselves apart from peers in order to retain market share.

Safety requirements

Safety is of utmost importance in the aerospace sector. The risks to employees should always be minimal, and passengers must be able to trust end products.

LYNQ has developed a range of innovative software solutions, designed to help mid-market manufacturers compete in today's market. Our applications are built to complement the best-of-breed ERP systems your company already relies on, and can improve operations in a number of ways.

- Better analyse cost and profit margins and track production activity with the help of easy-to-use workforce management software.
- Drastically reduce paperwork by using powerful online document storage, and enhance company-wide collaboration with convenient messaging features.
- Achieve better visibility of employee and equipment productivity to identify improvement opportunities quickly.
- Use online forms to record the results of quality control tests, minimising the risk of error.

LYNQ's solutions are already being used by manufacturers from the aerospace and defence industries.
