

Chemicals

How we help the Chemicals Industry

The manufacturing of chemicals and pharmaceuticals is big business in the UK. It's one of the country's leading export sectors, and is thought to be worth £60 billion. It also accounts for around 600,000 jobs, with the North East known as a particular hotspot for production and employment.

All of the businesses operating in this sector, however, face a unique set of challenges that can make it difficult to plan, schedule, execute and analyse effectively.

No room for error

Chemical manufacturing is a precise task, and mistakes can hit businesses financially and in other ways. It's essential that the right materials are available and that production is monitored closely to minimise user error.

Cost of raw goods

Chemical manufacturing relies on a huge range of raw materials, the availability and prices of which are prone to fluctuation. The ability to accurately determine stock requirements, therefore, is crucial.

Strict regulations

The industry is governed by stricter health and safety regulations than most, given the nature and volume of hazards present in the manufacturing environment.

Large product catalogues

Manufacturers are often tasked with managing large product portfolios, with production sometimes spread across disparate sites.

Here at LYNQ, we provide a range of ERP-enhancing software developed to help chemical manufacturing businesses overcome the challenges above, and more.

Our solutions can improve your operations in a number of ways:

- Become paperless, reduce overheads and cut waste by relying on online document attachments, messaging and alerts.
- Gain better visibility of employee performance by closely monitoring efficiency and quality levels.
- Improve performance across the factory floor with the help of powerful data analytics tools.

LYNQ's software is already being used by chemicals manufacturers to boost efficiency and expand profit margins.

Get in touch today to find out more about our software, and how it can help your business be more productive and more profitable. Email sales@thinklynq.co.uk.